

Project 2 (Raicu): “Texture-based segmentation.” The students working on this project investigate different image processing algorithms for texture-based segmentation in a Computed tomography of the human abdomen. This project will allow the students to experiment with a large collection of medical CT images, investigate which texture descriptors are the best for conducting the segmentation, and explore different image processing and machine learning techniques for segmentation.

